Aristotle is confident that there is an objective reality "out there," beyond human senses, but one which can be understood. Aristotle specifically targets the Sophist Protagoras. He claims that ". . . if all men are equally wrong and right, a person like that can neither speak nor tell us anything, for he is saying at the same time both 'yes' and 'no.'"

Ancient Greek Philosopher. Aristotle and his teacher Plato represent the most luminous duo of the philosophical thought of the ancient world. Aristotle was a wise, genius, encyclopedic, naturalist, creator of rationalism and the most important dialectician of the ancient times.

Aristotle, Ancient Greek Philosopher

Cynthia Freeland wrote: "Aristotle says that the courage of a man lies in commanding, a woman's lies in obeying; that 'matter yearns for form, as the female for the male and the ugly for the beautiful'; that women have fewer teeth than men; that a female is an incomplete male or 'as it were, a deformity'."

Aristotle's views on women - Wikipedia

Like Plato, Aristotle thinks in terms of the city-state, which he regards as the natural form of civilized life, social and political, and the best medium in which human capacities can be realized. Hence his famous definition of man as a "political animal," distinguished from the other animals by his gift of speech and power of moral judgment. "Man, when perfected," he writes,
