Almost 200,000 couples in America each year suffer through the tragedy of miscarriage. And that statistic only tells us about first trimester miscarriages. The emotional pain of longer-term miscarriages, and the untold numbers of mothers and fathers who keep silent about their hurt, make this form of child loss especially cruel. But in Silent Grief, author Clara Hinton brings a clear message ...

I have never wanted silence so much than in my experience of grief. Grief is so confusing, and all-consuming, that silence often feels like a necessity just to be able to breathe. And yet, I know that when the pain of the grief gets too much, the quickest route out of it is to talk through it. But it's a particular type of talk that does this.

A supposedly fun post-Christmas getaway with her family turned into a living nightmare in mere seconds. On the morning of December 26, Sonali woke up in the south of Sri Lanka to the sounds of the Yala National Park. She looked outside of her hotel room window, which faced the beach, usually showing a small sliver of the blue ocean water.
